Text D – The Psychology of Habit Formation

A. Habits govern a surprisingly large portion of human behaviour. Research by Duke University psychologist David Neal suggests habits account for roughly 40 per cent of our daily actions. Rather than deliberate choices, these behaviours are triggered automatically by environmental cues, allowing the brain to conserve energy for more complex tasks.

B. Habit formation follows a three-stage loop. The first stage is a cue – a trigger from the environment, such as a time of day or an emotional state. The second is the routine – the behaviour itself. The third is the reward – the positive outcome that reinforces the behaviour and makes repetition more likely.

C. The time required for habit formation varies widely. A study by Phillippa Lally at University College London found an average of 66 days for a behaviour to become automatic, with a range of 18 to 254 days across participants. Habit complexity and individual personality both play significant roles.

D. Breaking unwanted habits is considerably harder than forming positive ones. Attempting to suppress a behaviour can make it more prominent – a phenomenon known as “ironic process theory,” described by social psychologist Daniel Wegner. A more effective strategy involves replacing the routine while keeping the same cue and reward.

E. Governments and public health organisations have applied habit research to design “nudge” interventions that reshape environments to encourage healthier behaviour without requiring conscious effort. Placing fruit at eye level in supermarkets, for example, increases purchase rates without advertising.

F. Critics argue, however, that emphasising habit overlooks the importance of conscious decision-making. Not all desirable behaviours can be automated, and the assumption that environmental design can change complex social behaviour may be overly simplistic.

Questions 22–27: Which paragraph (A–F) contains the following information?

الفقرة (A-F)	Information	#
_____	Wide variation in how quickly habits form	22
_____	A strategy for eliminating unwanted habits	23
_____	An example of environmental design affecting consumer choices	24
_____	How habitual behaviour benefits the brain	25
_____	A criticism of environmental approaches to changing behaviour	26
_____	The three components that form a habit	27

Questions 28–34: TRUE / FALSE / NOT GIVEN

تعليمات

TRUE = تطابق مع النص | FALSE = تعارض | NOT GIVEN = غير موجود

إجابتك	Statement	#
☐ NG ☐ FALSE ☐ TRUE	According to Neal, less than half of daily actions are habitual.	28
☐ NG ☐ FALSE ☐ TRUE	The three-stage loop was first described by Phillippa Lally.	29
☐ NG ☐ FALSE ☐ TRUE	Habits typically become automatic after exactly 66 days.	30
☐ NG ☐ FALSE ☐ TRUE	Suppressing a behaviour can sometimes make it stronger.	31
☐ NG ☐ FALSE ☐ TRUE	All undesirable behaviours can be replaced using the habit loop.	32
☐ NG ☐ FALSE ☐ TRUE	Nudge interventions require no conscious effort from individuals.	33
☐ NG ☐ FALSE ☐ TRUE	The writer believes behaviour results from both habit and deliberate thought.	34

Section 3 – Academic Discussion

السيناريو

Two students discussing an assignment on urban transport

[Tom]: Have you started the transport assignment?

[Lucy]: Yes – I'm focusing on cycling infrastructure. It's cheaper than new roads and has health benefits.

[Tom]: But cycling only works in flat cities. The hills here put people off.

[Lucy]: That's why electric bikes could be the answer – the city could subsidise them.

[Tom]: Good point. But the main issue is safety – not enough protected lanes.

[Lucy]: Exactly. The report says the biggest barrier to cycling uptake is safety concerns, not hills.

[Tom]: So for the conclusion – invest in cycle lanes?

[Lucy]: Combined with e-bike subsidies. More realistic than building a whole underground system.

Questions 14-20: Choose the correct letter, A, B or C.

14. Lucy's main argument for cycling is that it is:

- ☐ A more popular
- ☐ B cost-effective and healthy
- ☐ C easy on hills

15. Tom believes the main obstacle to cycling is:

- ☐ A cost
- ☐ B lack of interest
- ☐ C hilly terrain

16. Lucy's proposed solution to the hill problem is:

- ☐ A a new metro
- ☐ B e-bike subsidies
- ☐ C wider pavements

17. According to the report, the biggest barrier to cycling is:

- ☐ A hills
- ☐ B cost
- ☐ C safety

18. Both students agree the conclusion should recommend:

- ☐ A underground system
- ☐ B cycle lanes + e-bikes
- ☐ C subsidised buses

19. Tom describes the underground option as:

- ☐ A the best solution
- ☐ B impractical
- ☐ C under consideration

20. The assignment focuses mainly on:

- ☐ A cycling safety
- ☐ B urban transport solutions

Section 4 – Academic Lecture: The History and Science of Sleep

Sleep was long seen as a passive state, but research since the 1950s revealed it as an active biological process. In 1953, Aserinsky and Kleitman discovered REM sleep – characterised by vivid dreams and heightened brain activity. Sleep consists of 90-minute cycles including light, deep, and REM stages. During deep sleep, the body repairs tissue, strengthens immunity, and consolidates memories. Studies show 17 hours without sleep produces cognitive impairment equivalent to a blood alcohol level of 0.05%. Chronic sleep deprivation links to cardiovascular disease, obesity, and depression.

Questions 21-27: Complete the notes. Write NO MORE THAN TWO WORDS AND/OR A NUMBER.

Science of Sleep – Notes

- Sleep was originally considered a (21) _____ state.

- REM sleep discovered in (22) _____ by Aserinsky and Kleitman.

- REM characterised by dreams and heightened (23) _____ activity.

- Each sleep cycle lasts approximately (24) _____ minutes.

- Deep sleep: repairs tissue, strengthens immunity, consolidates (25) _____

- 17 hours awake → impairment equal to blood alcohol of (26) _____

- Chronic deprivation linked to heart disease, (27) _____, and depression.
